CONCEPT NOTE

Historically, the addiction field was mainly focused on adults while the needs of children and youths were often left on the back burner. In order to focus on children's and adolescents' rights with regard to substance use and dependence, it is essential to address three main issues:

- preventing addiction during childhood and adolescence,
- coping with substance use-related problems in adolescents,
- and meeting the needs of children affected by parental substance use disorders.

This webinar will address these issues through the lens of policymaking efforts, recommendations, good practices, and challenges across the world.
